PennDulum* Mission Statement

The mission of PennDulum is to help Central Penn graduates stay connected with their alma mater, present opportunities for alumni, friends and community members to assist current and future students, and to share ways that readers can get involved in the life of Central Penn College.

Dear alumni and friends,

As I continue to meet with, befriend and learn from Central Penn College alumni, the more I marvel over their accomplishments. From inspiring and active community member Ardella (Hombach) Brubaker '30 to technology guru and this edition's cover story Carl Heininger '04, Central Penn graduates are making strides in all phases of their careers and walks of life.

It is important to Central Penn to celebrate your achievements and noteworthy projects. What better way to do this on a more significant level than to dedicate a full-time office to alumni engagement? Similar to how you can benefit from Central Penn's lifetime career services, you now have access to a new, centralized office on campus with just one focus—you! I am pleased to share with you the formal establishment of the Office of Alumni Engagement, housed within College Advancement.

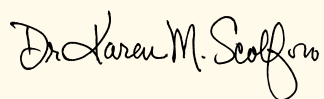

Those serving you through this office will be your ambassadors, your advocates and your event planners. Our graduates show their Central Penn pride in ways uniquely tied to their experiences and positions. While a 1972 graduate might want to impart knowledge to current students as an alumni mentor, a 2014 graduate might prefer to network and mingle with peers through a young alumni event series.

Sarah Blumenschein, a long-time college employee and member of the Central Penn family, is your alumni engagement director. You can reach out to her anytime to reconnect or to share your vision for how you feel Central Penn can give back to its more than 10,000 alumni worldwide. She will be in touch with you to continue to build our alumni network, and to gather your thoughts on alumni events, benefits, programs and opportunities. This office, in partnership with the Central Penn College Alumni Association, will also keep you informed of the latest campus happenings and developments.

Speaking of progress, past editions of PennDulum have discussed transformational campus updates such as The Underground and our new health sciences building. I am happy to report that the new Capital BlueCross Theatre in The Underground is being actively used by students and the community; in fact, Maestro Stuart Malina of the Harrisburg Symphony graced the stage with a special performance in January.

Central Penn College has many more impressive developments in store for 2015 to enhance our academic, campus and cultural/social offerings. Your alumni engagement office will keep you informed!

Respectfully,

GET IN TOUCH!

CARL HEININGER '04

A skyrocketing career and education | By Patricia Brosious

“BE PROUD.
A CENTRAL
PENN DEGREE
WILL TAKE YOU
ANYWHERE YOU WANT TO GO.”

CARL HEININGER '04, systems engineering manager for technology company Cisco, has stayed true to his most important advice to others: “Being in the right place at the right time only works if you are prepared for the opportunity. Work hard to prepare yourself for whatever comes your way so that you can take advantage of it if you choose.”

The always-upbeat Heininger has kept an amazing schedule of work, education, service and family life throughout his entire adult life. After hearing about Heininger’s professional achievements and diverse avocations, it’s hard to believe he is only 39 years old.

WHERE DO WE START?

Carl Heininger grew up in Hollidaysburg, Pa., graduating from the local public high school in 1993. His parents still live in the home in which he was raised, which brings memories of romping in the woods in rural Blair County with three older brothers.

His siblings took the traditional route of attending college upon graduation from high school, while Heininger, as the “baby,” he chuckles, was not so sure. In the middle of his senior year of high school, Heininger enlisted in the U.S. Army and began Airborne jump school that summer. He served for four years, participating in Operation Uphold Democracy, the intervention in Haiti designed to remove the military regime.

By 1997, he was safely at home in Hollidaysburg, but without a plan.

“One of my friends said, ‘Let’s try San Diego. It will be fun.’”

So off they drove to California, towing Heininger’s beloved motorcycle. After three years of lifeguarding and surfing, he was inspired by an ITT Technical Institute television commercial and returned to Pennsylvania to earn his first college degree, an associate in electronic engineering in 2000.

HEININGER’S PROFESSIONAL LIFE SKYROCKETS

Heininger received his first professional job offer in 2000 at the Capital Area Intermediate Unit (CAIU) in Enola, Pa., where he worked for eight years. He started as a technician, “fixing computer hardware,” according to Heininger, and ended as technology director with a number of software certifications under his belt.

John Aigeldinger, former program supervisor at the CAIU, remembers Heininger with admiration.

Aigeldinger explains, “Carl is a talented go-getter with a very animated personality. The man never has a bad day. It was great sitting around the table with him and being on his team.”

When Heininger talks about being prepared for opportunities, he knows firsthand.

He explains, “One day, I was having lunch with a co-worker at Brothers Pizza in Summerdale and discussing business. A Central Penn College faculty member was sitting nearby and overheard our conversation. He approached me and asked if I would be interested in teaching a software certification course at Central Penn.

Carl Heining, his wife, Jen, and three children.

Can you believe that's how I became associated with the college?"

Not far into his Central Penn teaching career, then Central Penn administrators Russell Kulp and Carrie Widdowson encouraged Heininger to complete his bachelor's degree. He followed their advice and graduated from Central Penn with his B.S. in business management in 2004.

Working full time at the CAIU, teaching part time at Central Penn and studying for a bachelor's degree, all at the same time ... wasn't it time to slow down? Not for Heininger. Before he even completed his bachelor's degree, he was researching master's degree options. After being accepted at the University of Pennsylvania Wharton's M.B.A. program and the University of Virginia (UVA) master's degree program in systems engineering, Heininger chose the latter.

"The UVA executive program started with a cohort of 40 and over a 13-month period, we met for intense periods of classroom work," Heininger explains.

He graduated with his M.S. from the prestigious program in 2005.

In 2008, Heininger was recruited by a consulting company, and then one year later he formed his own business, One System Consulting.

"I enjoy finding solutions for people," Heininger says. "I'm a process guy."

While business was good, Comcast came knocking at his door in 2011 with an enticing offer to build and lead a sales team focused on the largest accounts in the Mid-Atlantic region.

Heininger says, "Comcast was a great company to work for. I learned a great deal."

Bigger and better opportunities seem to find Heininger, and not because of luck. He's one of a seemingly small group of people who are both technical experts and salesmen. After working at Comcast and later as vice president of sales and marketing at the startup tech company Affiniti, based in Austin, Texas, Heininger accepted his current position as systems engineering manager at Cisco.

At Cisco, he leads a team of six that focuses on business solutions for state and local government, K-12 and higher education customers in Pennsylvania and Delaware.

"Cisco is on the forefront of technology in the routing, switching and wireless security markets," says Heininger. "The culture is amazing and it's very cutting edge, which aligns with my personal brand."

No wonder Heininger was chosen as a winner in Harrisburg's Central Penn Business Journal's popular annual contest '40 under 40' in 2014.

"I ENJOY FINDING SOLUTIONS FOR PEOPLE. I'M A PROCESS GUY."

HEININGER TALKS ABOUT HIS LONG-TERM GOALS

Heininger scoffs at the idea of an early retirement.

"Oh, gosh, no!" he shouts.

Before his career comes to an end, Heininger wants to be remembered as being part of a game-changing idea for society—a project or a process.

"Think iPhone," he says.

He doesn't want to be in the corporate world forever either.

"By the time I am 50, I want to teach full time at a university, which means I have to earn my Ph.D. in the next 10 years," he says. "I'm researching that now."

In the meantime, Heininger adds to his knowledge and skill-base through new opportunities. In 2013 Heininger accepted his appointment to Central Penn College's board of directors.

"I am a numbers guy and so I am happy to work with the other directors on the college budget, which drives the college's direction," he says. "Also I find that business concepts transfer well when discussing marketing and admissions."

HEININGER IS BUSY IN HIS DOWNTIME, TOO

Heininger and his family live in suburban Harrisburg, Pa, in a sprawling house that is designed for entertaining. He bought the home that sits on three wooded acres because he wants his three young children to have the same exposure to outdoor play that he had in Hollidaysburg.

The home's 10-car underground garage on a sloping lot doesn't house trophy cars, but his love of any motorized vehicle made this space an attractive feature to him. Heininger is not afraid to spend money on things that will return his investment, whether it's the newly installed geo-thermal system for the house or his extensive watch collection.

Heininger stays fit, but not like in the old days of team sports.

"I don't have time for evening adult sports leagues," he says. "Our family lives a healthy lifestyle through nutrition and activity."

HEININGER GIVES ADVICE TO CENTRAL PENN STUDENTS AND ALUMNI

Heininger is a strong advocate for Central Penn College. He believes that Central Penn provides the educational foundation to do great things.

He tells alumni and students, "Be proud. A Central Penn degree will take you anywhere you want to go."

DR. ANN BIEBER '77

EDUCATION CHANGES LIVES

BY PATRICIA BROSIOUS

Dr. Ann (DeFebo) Bieber '77, president of Lehigh Carbon Community College (LCCC), is gracious, warm and welcoming. It is easy to understand why her many admirers call her “student-centric.” On July 1, 2014, Bieber became president of the multi-campus institution with 7,500 students and a $42 million budget. Its flagship campus is located in hilly, pastoral Schnecksville, Pa., just 10 minutes north of Allentown, Pa.

The president’s office is the latest step in her ascendancy at the college.

“I started my career at LCCC in 1981,” Bieber explains. “My family lived the LCCC experience. My children spent time in the day care here as toddlers and took classes as adults. My husband and I studied here, too. LCCC is a second home to us over the course of 33 years.”

Growing up in small-town Pennsylvania

Ann DeFebo was raised in Berwick, Pa., 65 miles northeast of Harrisburg, Pa., a town well-known for its winning high school football teams. Like most others in the community, Bieber’s parents did not attend college. She needed to turn elsewhere for specific advice on what to do after graduation from Berwick High School in 1975.

Bieber reflects, “Central Penn did a great job back then recruiting students from rural communities of Pennsylvania. Central Penn was a school that some of my older classmates attended. When I made a visit to campus, Bart Milano showed me around and told me and others, 'You can do it! You will succeed here.'"

I found Central Penn to be a college that was—and still is—small enough for students to thrive, focusing on skills that transferred successfully to the job market."

Bieber enrolled in the associate degree program in paralegal studies and enjoyed her classes. On the personal side, she met someone very special while attending Central Penn.

Bieber smiles, "The women at Central Penn would often socialize with the men from Penn State in Middletown. That's how I met my husband, Matt."

Bieber worked as a paralegal in Berwick after graduation from Central Penn, but moved in 1979 to marry Matt, who had returned to the Lehigh Valley after college.

"I was presented with two job offers: paralegal from an Allentown law firm and secretary from LCCC. I chose LCCC because I knew I wanted to return to college and felt this position would allow me to continue for a bachelor's degree."

Finding her "Ginny"

Bieber enrolled in the adult program at Allentown's Cedar Crest College to begin her studies toward her bachelor of science degree.

"I met a counselor named Ginny, who encouraged me when I felt overwhelmed at the college," Bieber says.

She continues, "I tell students to 'Find your Ginny' and he or she will help you. Education changes lives. If you are fortunate to find individuals to support you, listen to them. People will help you if you take the help."

Bieber's bachelor's degree from Cedar Crest College was only her second of four degrees in higher education. She continued her educational path by earning a master's degree in public administration from Kutztown University and a doctoral degree from Capella University in educational leadership and administration.

In the meantime, Bieber's talents were noticed at LCCC and she was rewarded with positions of increasing responsibility.

"I was presented with two job offers: paralegal from an Allentown law firm and secretary from LCCC. I chose LCCC because I knew I wanted to return to college and felt this position would allow me to continue for a bachelor's degree."

Before being appointed president after an extensive, nationwide search, Bieber was senior vice president of administrative services and then interim president.

"I had to think long and hard before applying for the presidency. I was very happy in my position as senior vice president. The application deadline was the day after a board of directors' meeting. A board member hugged me after the meeting and thanked me for my service. 'That's my sign,' I thought, so I applied at the deadline."

She continues, "I tell students that I loved what I did so I was very accepting of whatever the outcome. If you love what you do, you will never be disappointed."

Her calm and confident demeanor, quick mind, high energy and passion for mentoring students combine to make Bieber an amazing teacher, too. Over the years, Bieber has shared her inspirational messages and knowledge as an adjunct professor at Villanova University's graduate school, DeSales University and Central Penn College.

Focusing on LCCC's future

Referring to a thick report prepared by LCCC's office of institutional research and effectiveness, Bieber pours over the facts and figures on enrollment, demographics, tuition, campuses and partnerships. She wants to continue to improve upon the community college's mission to provide high-quality education that is affordable and accessible.

One way is through the college's foundation, established in 1975, which Bieber oversaw as vice president. Similar to the Central Penn College Education Foundation, the Lehigh Carbon Community College Foundation helps students each year by providing scholarships and other financial opportunities. In addition, the LCCC foundation plays a key role in developing new connections to alumni and community members.

With $12 million in assets, the LCCC foundation was recognized in a research study by William R. Crowe, senior faculty and director of the University of Georgia Center for Continuing Education, as being in the top 100 community college foundations in the country in regard to assets and fundraising results.

The foundation received a large push with the recent donation of $1.575 million for technology scholarships from community leaders Lisa Scheller and Wayne Woodman.

Bieber believes that partnerships are crucial to LCCC's future. She spearheaded the development of "Many Voices, One Vision: LCCC 2014 – 2017," the college's three-year rolling strategic plan. This plan works to strengthen LCCC's relationships with the military, businesses, nonprofits and educational institutions.

One of the most interesting outreach efforts is LCCC's university center. At this dedicated space on campus, Bloomsburg University and Albright College each offer bachelor's degree programs to students. With seamless transfer of credits, a bachelor's degree becomes much more affordable and convenient for the graduating LCCC student. While the degree programs are limited in number now, Bieber is eager to expand the offerings by partnering with other colleges, including possibly Central Penn College.

Enjoying her family

Bieber and her husband live in Orefield, Pa., minutes from Bieber's office. They are grateful that their two children, both Lehigh University graduates, returned to the Lehigh Valley after living elsewhere for several years for further education and career opportunities.

Son Matt and daughter Natalie are both professionals in business and medicine, respectively. Bieber is eager for the family to expand and is very pleased with Matt's recent engagement at Christmas.

Sharing her thoughts with alumni and students

"Central Penn played a key role in my career," stresses Bieber. "It allowed me to succeed and became the foundation for my future. I want to create the same environment here at LCCC. As I said earlier, 'Education changes lives.'"

She finishes, "I want to Lead a Culture of Communication and Collaboration."

That's Ann Bieber's LCCC.

Banking and Financial Services Concentration Turns Heads

In January, the college began offering a new concentration in banking & financial services as part of its business administration bachelor's degree program. This program was driven by discussions and collaboration with members from the local banking community, with representation from organizations like Metro Bank, Wilmington Trust, PSECU, Mid Penn Bank and AmeriChoice Federal Credit Union.

"We received positive and constructive comments from the banking and financial services community," says Professor of Accounting and Business Spencer Martin. "This concentration was developed in partnership with industry professionals and leaders as an educational solution to current needs. Local employers are seeing a shortage of credit analyst positions, and often find that employees require additional training once hired. This concentration prepares graduates to step into a banking and financial services career with the skills and knowledge they need to succeed."

So far, feedback has been incredibly positive within the community. A partnership with the PA Bankers Association was developed that allows association members to transfer into the program coursework from the American Bankers Association/PA Bankers Association that has been evaluated and approved by the American Council on Education.

Members 1st Federal Credit Union has generously created a scholarship fund for the concentration, with an initial contribution of $3,000. The first banking & financial services scholarship will be awarded this year.

"I applaud Central Penn College for developing a degree that helps address the needs and challenges of the financial services industry," says Pat Noel, Metro Bank's university director.

"These students will find themselves with a distinct advantage in the workplace through the concepts and knowledge this degree provides. And, it will give potential employers a reason to take a closer look at these students' resumes."

Central Penn is currently accepting applications for the business administration bachelor's degree program with a concentration in banking & financial services. If you know of a person or an organization that would like to learn more about the program, please have them visit centralpenn.edu/business or contact admissions at 1-800-759-2727.

Eighteenth-Century Scholars

Dr. Melissa Wehler, dean of the School of Humanities and Sciences, and Matthew Vickless, associate professor of English, participated in the 45th annual conference of the East-Central American Society for Eighteenth-Century Studies (EC/ASECS), held at the University of Delaware. Wehler and Vickless were invited to join Tonya Howe of Marymount University and Rodney Maderv of West Chester University as panelists at a session titled "Research in Progress," organized by Jim May, an English professor at Penn State DuBois and highly-regarded editor of The Eighteenth-Century Intelligencer, EC/ASECS's newsletter and journal. Wehler delivered a well-received paper on the Irish actor Charles Macklin and the question of British nationalism in the eighteenth century, using material discovered during her doctoral research. Vickless presented a reflective paper focused on the issue of research involving digitized eighteenth-century texts, highlighting certain problems digitization creates for scholars. Overall, more than 80 academics participated in the conference, which drew eighteenth-century scholars from across the country and beyond, including several from Ghent University in Belgium.

Writing After College: Some Tips for Workplace Writers

by Matthew Vickless
Associate Professor of English

Today's professionals, regardless of their specific fields, simply must be able to write clearly and persuasively. Recently, more than three hundred Fortune 1000 executives identified clear and persuasive writing as a crucial workplace skill (MetLife, 2011, p. 21). As an English professor at Central Penn, I teach a variety of classes aimed to help students develop the writing component of their emerging professional identities. Yet many Central Penn graduates soon discover that the need for writing development doesn't end with graduation. If you are looking to further develop your workplace writing skills, here are some tips and resources.

Think Like a Reader: writing is a transactional tool, used to exchange a wide array of information and opinions. Before you undertake any workplace writing, take some time to consider what you would like to have happen at the other end of the exchange. Identify your reader's (or readers') defining characteristics, core values, and overall expectations of you, and then try to choose words, phrases, and sentence structures that align. Thinking like your reader will help you compose user-centered documents. Purdue University's Online Writing Lab (OWL) contains some wonderful resources on user-centered workplace writing.

Seek Out Examples: although clear and persuasive writing is a universally-valued skill throughout the professional world, many professions employ discipline-specific writing genres. Among the most common workplace writing genres are emails, letters, memos, reports, proposals, white papers, résumés, and the like; however, even the defining characteristics of these common genres tend to differ from profession to profession. A report about an occupational therapy session will have a different formatting, tone, and style than a criminologist's field report; likewise, a business proposal will look quite different from a nonprofit grant application. Seek out effective (and even not-so-effective) examples of the kind of document you need to compose. Try to reverse-engineer them, adapting and adopting the most common of the effective structures, formatting, sentence styles, and tonal characteristics that you discover. The professional writing program at the University of Maryland maintains an extensive list of common writing genres.

Remember the Three Ps (Precision, Parallelism, and Prioritization): no single style rule applies equally to every writing situation, but most workplace writing will gain clarity by means of three stylistic principles. First, aim to make your workplace writing as precise as possible; you will achieve precision when you choose words that are both accurate and commonly used in your discipline. Next, add parallelism to your workplace writing; parallelism means being consistent with the grammatical structures you employ to communicate related ideas, items in a list, and information of equal importance. Finally, your workplace documents generally will be clearer if the information contained in them is prioritized; documents should be organized so that more important information comes before less important information. In most cases, workplace writing that is precise, parallel, and prioritized will achieve its purpose. Any reputable style guide, including many that are widely available online (like the Purdue OWL), will contain resources on these three stylistic principles.

If you think like a reader, seek out examples, and remember the three Ps, then the effectiveness of your workplace writing will increase exponentially. So remember that writing is an area of your professional life that will always reward ongoing development: make it a point to grow as a writer throughout your career—you'll be glad you did!

Another Year of Growth

Because of you, many new businesses and individuals partnered with the education foundation in 2014. Because of you, the Changing the Landscape Campaign for Scholarships: Phase 1 was a huge success. Because of you, more students than ever received scholarships to help them stay enrolled.

I hope you enjoy this annual report and honor roll of donors. The story is yours and you deserve to be thanked and recognized.

There is no “downtime” in the education foundation office when student financial needs continue to be so great. So the Changing the Landscape Campaign for Scholarships: Phase 2 begins this year with scholarship giving tied to naming opportunities in the college’s new health sciences building.

The students and I hope you are able to continue your tradition of generosity by contributing to this campaign. More information will be available soon. In the meantime, many blessings to you and your loved ones in 2015.

Foundation

Committee Credited for Successful Campaign

The Changing the Landscape Campaign for Scholarships: Phase 1 surpassed its $250,000 goal by receiving pledges of $271,000 in less than five months.

According to Education Foundation Executive Director Matt Lane, “The Changing the Landscape campaign was an important ‘experiment’ in the education foundation’s history. The campaign joined the construction of The Underground, the campus’ new student union, with new funding for scholarships. The campaign owes its tremendous success to 11 talented and enthusiastic committee members. They introduced us to many new donors and paved the way for a campaign that exceeded its financial goal.”

Led by education foundation trustee and JDK Group CEO Jen Delaye, the campaign committee also included Central Penn employees Dr. Karen M. Scolforo, Tim Carraher, Joshua Ash, Sue Berry, Rod Groff and Janice Moore, along with foundation representatives Jennifer Buehler ’91, Pat Brosious, Sandra Box and Matt Lane.

In return for scholarship donations, the campaign provided 19 prominent recognition opportunities within The Underground. All spaces were quickly sponsored.

Along with gratitude to the committee, the education foundation gives special thanks to The Underground’s room sponsors:

The campaign’s largest donor at $75,000. The Underground’s theatre/multi-purpose room, The Capital BlueCross Theatre at Central Penn College, is named in the insurance company’s honor.*

Changing the Landscape: Phase 2 introduced

The Changing the Landscape Campaign for Scholarships: Phase 2 gives donors the opportunity to provide scholarship funding for Central Penn students while receiving recognition within the newly-constructed, state-of-the-industry health sciences building.

Limited naming opportunities for individual rooms within the health sciences building are available beginning at the $5,000 level. Room sponsors will be recognized on plaques within their chosen area.

In addition, donors who give $1,000 and above to this campaign become members of the ‘We Care’ Club, with recognition along the building’s main corridor. Three-year pledges are welcome.

To learn more about this campaign, please contact Executive Director Matt Lane at mattlane@centralpenn.edu or 717-728-2263.

Legacy Branch Extends Its Reach

The legacy branch of the arboretum society is a recognition club for those who remember Central Penn with a planned gift from their estates of $10,000 or more. The education foundation is honored that several individuals selected Central Penn College for a special gift when planning to gift their assets.

Legacy branch members provided some of the largest and earliest gifts to the education foundation and are responsible for its successful establishment.

Please contact Executive Director Matt Lane at mattlane@centralpenn.edu or 717-728-2263 for information on joining these special friends of Central Penn College.

Central Penn's International Initiatives

by Danielle Klebes, International Recruitment Director

Shwedagon Pagoda, closeup of statue, Yangon, Myanmar

Fall 2014 marked the third trip to Asia in one year for Central Penn College. This international initiative and focus on Southeast Asia was founded on extensive research regarding the potential for international student growth. We returned to Asia this February with stops in Thailand, Indonesia, Singapore and Vietnam.

The visits to Asia consist primarily of school visits and fairs, during which all participating colleges and universities set up a table display with information about their college. The students then collect information and chat with the college representatives. The school visits are smaller and more intimate with usually around 75 students. The fairs often attract 300 to 400 students.

With the help of Central Penn's international recruitment venture, we hope to not only increase diversity on campus, but also to spotlight the diversity we already have. There are several initiatives in place on campus including a new cultural diversity office, a new annual festival—the festival of nations, and a diversity speaking series, where speakers present on topics such as world affairs and women in Islam.

The cultural diversity office is headed by Cultural Diversity Director Romeo Azondekon. Azondekon is working to prepare the college for the arrival of international students by providing resources and training sessions, and establishing partnerships with state and federal organizations.

“Taking these proactive measures will assist in the academic and social success of incoming international students at Central Penn College,” says Azondekon.

Welcome to Lancaster, Audrey Bare!

Career Services is excited to welcome Audrey Bare as our new career services associate in Lancaster. Audrey has a master's degree in school counseling from Millersville University, and a master's degree in public administration and education policy from the University of Delaware. In her spare time she loves to travel, and has been to England, France, Italy, Mexico, and Trinidad and Tobago.

In addition to working with Lancaster Center students and online students, Bare will provide career development services to alumni and develop relationships with employers in the Lancaster area. If you live in the Lancaster area and would like to meet with her, please contact her at 717-728-2431 or audreybare@centralpenn.edu to schedule an appointment.

One of Bare's goals in 2015 is to expand the number and variety of career development workshops offered at the Lancaster location. We would love to hear from our alumni with ideas for workshops that would be most beneficial to you. Bare will use technology to create new presentations on our YouTube channel, and connect with students and alumni via our career services Facebook page. She will also find additional ways to provide the services you need when you cannot connect with us in person. Tell us how we can best serve you!

Championing Diversity

Professor Maria Thiaw received the business diversity champion award from the Harrisburg Regional Chamber & CREDC. The chamber recognized recipients of the 2014 Catalyst Awards at their annual awards event on Dec. 4, 2014, at the Whitaker Center for Science and the Arts, where more than 400 business and community leaders gathered for the honors.

The awards honor individuals or groups who best exemplify the chamber's goal of being a catalyst for the Harrisburg region, making it a better place to live, work and play. Jen Delaye of The JDK Group, and a member of the Central Penn College Education Foundation Board of Trustees, received the entrepreneur of the year award.

Mike Wilson '00, '04, in criminal justice and criminal justice administration, and Dr. Karen M. Scoforo celebrate at the Central Penn Business Journal's business of the year award ceremony held on Nov. 10, 2014, at the Hilton Harrisburg. Wilson accepted the 2014 emerging business of the year award for The Vineyard & Brewery at Hershey where he is vice president of sales and marketing.

Criminal justice administration student Giancarlo Van Wright and accounting student Laiken Binner are selected as the 2014 Fall Harvest king and queen. The respective charities they supported, Teach for America and the Foundation for Hope, received the highest number of votes.

On Dec. 18, 2014, Tracey Jones, president of Tremendous Life Books, posed with students in Professor Glen Dunbar's social responsibility class. Jones' guest lecture was on the importance of giving back to your community, as well as the values of ethics and integrity. Left to right: Dunbar, student Zuhora Korkutovic, student Dezmyn Edmond, Jones, student Robert Kivlan and student Daniel Lekberg.

Alumni, please keep us informed

We don't want you to miss a single issue of your alumni publication, so be sure to let us know if you marry, move or change jobs. Your success is important to us so keep us informed of career changes and promotions by visiting centralpenn.edu/letusknow. And if you know someone who attended Central Penn, but is not receiving PennDulum, encourage them to contact us or stop by and visit. Alumni are always welcome!

REUNIONS

1970s

Karen (Etzweiler) Hepler '73, medical assisting, invites classmates who were enrolled in the medical field at Central Penn to join her for a mini reunion on the Summerdale campus. Additional classmates from the 1970s are welcome to join the event. Special highlights will include tours of the newly-opened health sciences building and The Underground. If you're interested in attending, please email Hepler at heplerk@gmail.com or Linda Buffington '12 at lindabuffington@centralpenn.edu.

1980s

Attention all classmates enrolled in the Court Reporting Program around the 1989 timeframe: Mary Gladwell thought it would be fun to hold a 25th reunion and reconnect with old friends. All who were in the program in that general time period are welcome, even if you weren't a 1989 graduate. Please send her an email at mporterrmr@aol.com or contact her at 267-371-9548. She needs to see if there is any interest in a reunion before she proceeds with the planning stages. Looking forward to hearing from you!

Mike Gallagher '76, invited classmates from 1975, '76 and '77 to a mini reunion on Aug. 1, 2014. The group is pictured at the Alumni Association sponsored Harrisburg Senators game and picnic on City Island in Harrisburg, Pa. More than 100 alumni and friends came to the event.

Maria (Zahorchak) Miller '95 with her husband, David, and daughter, Kylie was a long road, but worth the journey. We have one daughter, Kylie Brooke. Wishing all my classmates and former volleyball teammates continued success. Feel free to email me at scubanhooba@aol.com." The family resides in Houston, Tex.

Melanie (Andrews) Shellenhamer '99 with daughter Olivia

Melanie (Andrews) Shellenhamer '99, legal assistant, has been a paralegal at Rhoads & Sinon for nine years. She specializes in personal injury cases and said that social media can play a significant role in the outcome of a case. "It is amazing to see how much information people put out there without even thinking," she says. Prior to joining Rhoads & Sinon, Shellenhamer was a paralegal for Rite Aid and she has discovered working for a legal firm is quite different from corporate. She was back on campus to attend a continuing education seminar and hopes to return for a visit and tour. When recalling her time at Central Penn she said, "John DeLeo is the best!" Her daughter, Olivia, is two years old and they reside in Harrisburg, Pa.

Janell Burton Abdoo '00 in The Boyer House

2000s

Janell Burton Abdoo '00, A.S. in paralegal, was back in the area and enjoyed a tour of campus, including a visit with Steve Hassinger in career services. Ashley (Fuhrman) Richards '02, Janice Moore and Gina Lawver '03

JEAN D. (BENNETCH) GROVER '65

Equipped with a medical secretary associate degree in 1965, Jean D. (Bennetch) Grover, began a career that would span almost a half-century at Lancaster General Health. You can imagine how much transpired in the medical field during that time. Grover wrote an interesting article on her experiences; check it out at edwardhandmedicalheritage.org/48yearsOR.html.

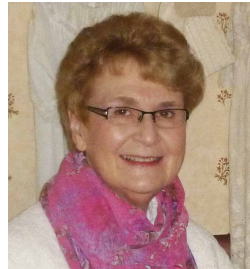

Talk about a change in perspective:

"When I was offered a job in the OR at Lancaster General Hospital in September 1965, I told them I didn't think I wanted the Operating Room (OR). The man interviewing me suggested I try it for one week and if I didn't like it, he would transfer me. Forty-eight years later I retired from the OR. It was a wonderful place to work. I thoroughly enjoyed my job, learned a lot and made many new friends throughout the years.

At first I worked at the control desk scheduling operations, billing and keeping records; the last several years I worked with the OR computer systems as system administrator and user coordinator in the OR. When I started working we had manual typewriters and now they have an electronic medical record."

Classmates can email Grover at jdgrover2646@gmail.com.

Grover plans to visit her alma mater and is on board for a mini-reunion with graduates from the 1960s. She enjoys traveling, stamping and counted cross stitch, and says that she hopes God will allow her and her husband to continue to enjoy their home in Lebanon County. She has lived at the same place all but 13 years of her life.

KIMBERLY HOUSER '79

Finding her niche in litigation, Kim Houser '79, A.S. in legal assisting and '89, advanced paralegal – litigation, enjoys working as a paralegal at Rhoads & Sinon, LLP. She's been there seven years and spends most of her time working in the areas of discovery, e-Discovery and document management.

“There is no typical day for me, but that is part of the excitement and fun,” says Houser. “I can plan what I want to accomplish tomorrow, and when I arrive at work those plans are sometimes pushed aside. I find it is necessary to carry a notepad and pen with me at all times. I never know when I will get stopped in the hall and be asked to do something. A great attitude and willingness to assist is essential in helping to juggle the many interruptions that come my way. To be successful, you must find out what area suits you best and then learn all about it. Specialization is key. Yes, it's important to have a general legal background, but today's attorney tends to focus in specialized areas of law.”

Houser attended a legal conference on campus in the mid-2000s. Her special Central Penn memories include team-teaching with Professor John DeLeo in civil litigation and mock trials (1988-1995). She keeps in touch with many of the students she taught. Classmates and students can reach her at kjh522@hotmail.com.

Tilton, her cat, is “her baby” and he runs the house they share in Marysville, Pa.

TJ ADKINSON '13

The Bachelor of Science in Information Technology helped TJ Adkinson move from help desk specialist to branch manager at Members 1st Federal Credit Union. He enjoys solving financial problems and allowing members to worry less about managing their finances and focus more on their personal lives or growing their businesses.

As a student working part-time at Central Penn College, Adkinson used his Information Technology (IT) skills to help solve problems at the college's help desk. During his sophomore year in 2010, he fulfilled his internship in the IT department at Members 1st. He served a short time as a teller, something just about everyone in banking does. His dedication, initiative and work ethic did not go unnoticed and Adkinson was hired full time as a help desk specialist. He then moved up the ladder to systems support technician and later to assistant branch manager. At Members 1st, Adkinson was named "Associate of the Year" for 2013 and was promoted to branch manager in October 2014. He accomplished all of that in less than four years, while finishing his degree and graduating in 2013.

"The number one thing I remember was during Day one orientation, President (Emeritus) Milano passed out his business card and told us to write on the back, 'I will graduate by ____ date.' I may have been a semester behind, but nonetheless it motivated me to keep moving toward finishing my degree," shares Adkinson.

Classmates can email Adkinson at adkinsont@members1st.org. He resides in Harrisburg, Pa.
